1- Introduction: Muslim/Shia Muslim Mosques

Although Islam can be practiced in the absence of a mosque, reports showed that by 1983 Muslims in the United States owned 110 Mosques or centers in 24 states and the district of Columbia. Bilalians have constructed 156 Mosques in 39 states between 1976 and 1988. Right now (1995) there are 1241 Mosques in 52 states, 256 Mosques are constructed by Shia Muslim Communities.

Canadian Muslims have mosques in at least one city in every province. These mosques, some of which reflect traditional Islamic architecture, are sites of a broad spectrum of activities from Friday prayers, holiday celebrations, marriage and funeral rites, classes for children and lectures for adults to informal social gatherings. There are 115 mosques in 10 Canadian provinces, 27 mosques are constructed by Shia Muslim community. Since 1950s the governments of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Pakistan and Lebanon have allocated funds for the construction of mosques for Muslim communities in non-Muslim lands including U.S. and Canada. Nevertheless, many Muslims/Shia Muslims in Anglo-America still gather to pray in rented halls and private homes. A council of Shia mosques and Imams from U.S. and Canada was formed in 1973, and a number of branches established in several cities.

2- North American Muslim/Shia Muslim Organizations

National -level Islamic organizations first emerged in the USA and Canada in 1950s. A Lebanese world -war -II veteran organized the Federation of Islamic Association (FIA) in 1954; despite factional dispute arising in 1980s, it owns buildings and extensive camp grounds, publishes the Muslim Star, and has a scholarship fund for college bound high school graduates. The Muslim students Associations of the U.S. and Canada (MSA) was founded in 1963 to promote Islamic solidarity, preserve the Islamic way life, and foster friendship with non-Muslims. It has over one hundred branches and has spawned the Islamic Medical Associations, the Association of Muslim social Scientists, and the Association of Muslim Scientists and Engineers. It operates an Islamic teaching center, a press, a book service, and missionizes in hospitals and prisons in U.S. and Canada.

Each Muslim ethnic group has its own religious and secular societies as well. Muslim ethnic communities are differentially integrated in the North American mainstream, depending on the social background of members in their homeland and opportunities and constraints in localities where they live.

Shia Muslim in U.S. (1,962,000) have already established 265 Mosques, 666 Mussallas, 643 Husseinyas, 751 societies/associations, 297 Cultural Center, 770 Elementary school classes, 55 secondary school classes, 61 publications and held 1140 religious and cultural functions in 1995. While Shia Muslims in Canada (256,000) have also already established 27 Mosques, 64 Mussallas, 107 Husseinyas, 121 societies/associations, 40 Cultural Center, 96 Elementary school classes, 14 Secondary school classes, 22 publications and held 189 religious and cultural functions in 1995.

In the last 25 years, the rate of growth in U.S. was 215 % for all Muslims, 350 % for Shia Muslims, 601 % for Mosques and 400 % for Mussallas. In Canada the same rate of growth was 281 % for all Muslims, 394 % for Shia Muslims, 235 % for Mosques and 313 % for Mussallas.

Tables 1 & 2 show the major Muslim/Shia Muslim communities in the U.S. and Canada, and tables 3 & 4 show the growth of the Muslims, their communities, Mosques and Mussallas in the U.S. and Canada between 1890 and 1995.
